LEARNING TO LIVE ALONE

BY SUSIE M. BEST

I am learning the saddest lesson
A women's heart has known,
The lesson of silent patience
In learning to live alone ;
For the one that I loved the dearest
Was kissed by the Angel Pale,
And he turned from my side to follow
The lead of a strange new trail.

Sometimes in the quiet glancing
When I watch the stars arise,
My tears like a terrible tempest
Brim over my aching eyes,
And out of my broken bosom
Old dreams come crowding up,
Till I fling myself face downward
And cry, "Oh, not this cup !"

And I sob in the lonely darkness
With a grief uncomforted ;
(For there is no peace in Promise
When our loved lie newly dead)
I have neither star nor anchor,
And my heart is like a stone,
For it's, oh, a bitter sorrow,
This learning to live alone.

DELAWARE RIVER IMPROVEMENTS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6th.—The report of the Chief of Engineers of the army, made public to-day, devotes considerable space to the progress of the Delaware River improvements. It gives $1,000,000 as the amount that can be profitably expended next year, in addition to the balance unexpended at the beginning of the present fiscal year.

It gives a history of the various improvements in the Delaware, showing that the entire amount expended in this way from 1836 to June 30th, 1905 under appropriations for special localities and the general river improvement, not including Philadelphia harbor, was $6,279,278 97, of which $124 500 was expended on the part of the river between Trenton and Philadelphia.

The total amount expended on the 26-foot project since its adoption in 1885 was $1,532,688 81, of which about $200,000 is estimated to have been applied to maintenance. In addition to this expenditure $146,932 26 has been expended since the adoption of the 26-foot channel in 1885 on special localities on the river under appropriations made for the purpose.

The report shows that work under the existing project was begun under an appropriation of $300,000 in the river and harbor act of 1899. In 1900 was appropriated $270,500 for continuing the improvement; in 1901, $61,500; in 1902, $600,000, with authority to contract for $2,400,000 additional; in 1905, $500,000, with authority to contract for $1,000,000 additional.

Hold on, there ! Stop scratching matches on the wall or on the door casing or wherever it happens. You can't get the marks off. But for a penny you can get a piece of sandpaper. Tack that up; use it.

THE FARM, GARDEN AND DAIRY

Little Paragraphs That will Interest Every Member of the Household

Who makes everything right must rise early.

The pine is a native of America. The pear and apple are from Europe.

"You always seem so jolly ; don't you ever berrow trouble?" "No ; the interest is too high."

France believes a hen is more valuable as a meat and egg producer than a grower of fine feathers.

When we get to raising nothing but good men we shall need to raise much less money for war vessels and cannon.

Town men are always worrying about the way farmers neglect their machinery. Don't town men do trifling things?

Set apart a certain time in which to do all the little jobs. You have no idea how much worriment such a method will save you.

Only four years ago the daily papers throughout the Northwest were denouncing macaroni wheat as worthless "goose wheat." Now who's a goose?

Are you patient with the children and the men and the neighbors whom you have dealings? We all need to be patiently dealt with, for every one of us makes mistakes.

The world's production of gold during the last thirty days combined was $4,897,000,000, but the United States farms alone this year raised crops worth over $5,000,000,000.

As life progresses you will find you must either bend or break ; so try to laugh off your "blues" for they are harmful to both body and soul. Now, three cheers for the farmer !

As the cold increases, if you find that the stables are not warm enough, building paper, liberally used and carefully put on, will help the matter. It is cheaper than anything else.

Many a farm and farmer would go to rack and ruin, morally and financially, were it not for the woman's influence and the wife's help. The average farmer and farm are what they are largely because of the wife.

Even Grover Cleveland has been smitten with the desire to go "back to the farm" and has purchased estates in New Hampshire to which he may retire to rest from the strenuousity of active life. Lots of others are doing the same thing.

Look over your mail before the young folks get at it. Some of the most dangerous literature of the day comes to us through the medium of circular letters. The only reason why it is fit to make a fire with is because it smells so of the sulphur and brimstone of the infernal regions.

The straw burned in the Northwest every fall would make some countries rich. But if you don't save all the straw, be sure and save plenty of bedding. And fix up the barns, if they need fixing, as some most certainly do. "In peace prepare for war" was a good motto for little Japan ; and in good weather prepare for cold and storms is a good one for the dairyman. A pane of glass may save a cow.

We have seen several letters from commi-sion men which read about as follows: "There is absolutely no sale for cultivated ginseng, and there is no use for it outside of the Chinese trade." This is the end of the great boom in ginseng. It comes earlier than he expected, yet we understand people are still investing their hard-earned money in seeds and roots.—Rural New Yorker.

The pride of the Missouri mule received a sad blow when the state labor commissioner made known to him that beside the Missouri hen he was an insignificant animal, hardly to be taken into account as a money maker for the farmer. The Missouri hen, for the fiscal year just closed, was worth just $31,642,762.61 in the shape of eggs, and chickens and feathers marketed—20,751 carloads in all. That was a few million dollars greater than the combined surplus product of horses, mules, hogs and sheep of the same period.

A feeding expert has figured amounts of corn it takes to produce various amounts of pork, under normal condition. One bushel of corn will produce 10 1-8 pounds of pork, from which you can easily determine whether it is better to sell corn or pork. Careful experiments have shown the following facts in regard to feeding corn to make pork. Fifty pounds of corn, fed ground and raw makes 15 pounds of pork. Fifty lbs. of corn, fed whole and raw makes 10 pounds of pork. Fifty pounds of corn, fed ground and fermented, makes 17 pounds of pork. Fifty pounds of corn fed cooked and fermented makes 20 pounds of pork.

A. O. U. W. REGISTERS

Dr. George W. Marshall, State Insurance Commissioner, is pleased that the Ancient Order of United Workmen has registered with him, complied with all of the state laws concerning life insurance companies and become qualified to do business the same as any other life insurance company.

While the order is not compelled under the law to take such a coarse, it is felt that the action will give the order a standing which cannot be assailed and the granting of the certificate by the insurance commissioner shows that the order is qualified to do business just the same as any other life insurance company would be, and must have therefore satisfied the insurance commissioner as to its assets and ability to do precisely what it promises.

As the order which has registered is the oldest and largest of the fraternal organizations doing business in Delaware, it is generally expected that the other fraternal organizations will follow the same plan and will thus give themselves a standing which they never before enjoyed as the certificate gives official approval to their statements.

OUR WOMAN'S COLUMN

It is said that 7,700 wives were deserted by their husbands in New York last year.

In Belgium women consider it a disgrace to have a hired girl. The mistress must be lazy.

Some folks buy books to put money in their heads ; others buy clothes and put money on their backs.

A girl is never satisfied until the right man comes along and says the right thing at the right time.

Don't imagine that every sad eyed woman you meet has loved and lost. It's more likely she loved and got him.

More than 2,000,000 club women have adopted a memorial calling upon the United States Senate to unseat Smoot.

In some South American tribes the women draw the front teeth, esteeming as an ornament the black gap thus made.

The American game of basket ball is becoming very popular with British women. It was invented by Mr. Hart of Columbia.

Don't draw down the shades in your living room as soon as evening falls. Let your light shine out to cheer to passers-by.

Miss Roosevelt says she is glad to get back to America. Well, she is one of those fortunate people who do not need to work after their vacations are ended.

As a suggestion of the minute ramifications of paternalism in Germany the government has ordered the rigid prohibition of corsets by the high school girls during gymnastic exercises.

The president of the Congress of Mothers says children should be allowed to get "gloriously dirty" every day. They are pretty apt to if the Congress of Mothers spends much time in session.

There is a concert company of five sisters traveling in Illinois, the Trier sisters. The sopranos are twins, the altos twins, and Miss Edna, the oldest, is but thirty-five months older than the youngest.

The Christmas present question is demanding the attention of those having a large number of relatives and friends. Some are wondering what to give ; others would just like to know what they will receive.

Mrs. Sarah J. Westervelt of St. Louis was awarded damages of $1 a day for the rest of her life, estimated at fifteen years, in her suit against the St. Louis Transit and United Railways companies for injuries received in a street car collision.

DELAWARE'S GAME LAWS

As the "open" season for gunning approaches sportsmen are busily engaged in hunting up the laws governing the hunting for and handling of game in this State. The season promises to be an excellent one for rabbits as they are plentiful, but quail are scarce. Thousands of these birds having perished during the severe cold and heavy snows of last winter.

The season for both quail and rabbit will open on November 15th.

Two acts were passed by the last Legislature affecting the game laws.

The opening date of the season for reed birds was changed to September 1st, to conform with that in adjoining States; and protecting all squirrels. The closed season for game in Delaware is as follows: Squirrel (other than red and only in Kent and New Castle Counties) and rabbit, from January 1st to November 15th; quail, partridge and pheasant, from January 1st to November 15th; dove, all the year; reed bird, ortolan or rail, from February 2d to September 1st; duck (except wood duck,) goose, brant and swan, from April 16th to October 1st.

The sale of quail, partridge and pheasant is prohibited, and the buying for sale is prohibited. Delaware imposes a license fee of $5 for non-resident hunters, the license being issued by the Delaware Game Protective Association. For each subsequent year the fee is $2.

Delaware also prohibits the export of rabbit, quail, partridge, woodcock, and non-residents are also prohibited from shipping Wilson or English snipe.

GENERAL DU PONT'S TRIP

DOVER, Nov. 6th.—General T. Coleman Du Pont, accompanied by members of his family and guests, drove from Wilmington to Dover on a four-horse buckboard on Saturday. The party, which returned to Wilmington yesterday, included Mrs. Du Pont and her children and Miss Pyle and Miss Tybout.

During the stay here General Du Pont conferred with Senator Allee. It is understood that the political situation in this State was discussed at length, although General Du Pont said subsequently : "We are enjoying the scenery of little Delaware."

WHAT TO TEACH A GIRL

Teach her that 100 cents make $1.

Teach her to wear a calico dress and wear it like a queen.

Teach her to say "no" and stick to it, or "yes" and mean it.

Teach her to arrange the bed room as well as the parlor or library.

Teach her to dress for health and comfort as well as for appearance.

Teach her how to darn stockings, sew on buttons and mend a glove.

Teach her to have nothing to do with intemperate or dissolute young men.

Teach her to observe the morals and habits and not money in selecting her associates.

The old rule of "a place for everything and everything in its place."

Teach her the more she lives within her income the more she will save for a "rainy day."

Teach her to cultivate the talent she has and not waste time and money on the talent she does not possess.

Teach her to embrace every opportunity for reading and to select carefully the books that are elevating in their tone, and above all avoid trashy novels.

The times have changed greatly in regard to occupations open for employment of women. In the days of not so very long ago there was only one occupation that afforded girls and women an opportunity to earn a living, and that was teaching school. No matter what her previous training had been about every girl that had received a few years' instruction in a district school felt that she was competent to teach. Then they were employed in the schools throughout the length and breadth of the land and often at ridiculously small wages. They monopolized the summer schools to such an extent that the schoolmaster was seldom seen abroad other than in the winter months when there was a premium paid for brawn and muscle to keep the unruly boys in check who were only enrolled for the winter term. A great change has gradually taken place, and now, notwithstanding fairly remunerative salaries are paid, we are told that the crop of schoolma'ams is short and that the demand will soon exceed the supply. The reason for this changed condition is obvious. A woman now has many opportunities for labor in various new fields of usefulness opened up for her. The exacting, nerve racking and soul grinding work of instructing and controlling and whipping into shape large classes of children is no longer inviting. The girls are found in stores as clerks, cashiers, bookkeepers and stenographers. They study medicine, law and for the ministry. They are found in factories, shops and printing offices and make excellent employes. Many are employed as telephone and telegraph operators and there are but few lines that employ large number of laborers but you will find more or less women enrolled in some part of the work. The pay may not be as large as the teachers now receives, and the hours of service longer, still there is a freedom and lack of responsibility that makes the work attractive than the exacting requirements demanded of those who are called to perform the difficult task of teaching school.

EIGHT HOURS OR STRIKE

Wilmington Typographical Union Monday night discussed the question of whether the union printers should go on a strike if their demand for an eight-hour day is not granted by January 1st. The "eight-hour committee" at a conference with the master printers on Wednesday night last said they would refer the question of eight hours or strike to the union for its expression. Monday night the union decided that its members should strike if the eight-hour day is not conceded the first of next year. A communication to this effect was drafted in behalf of the union and sent to the master printers' association. The order for an eight-hour day was issued by the International Typographical Union sometime ago to every local union in the country.

THE RURAL POSTMASTERS

A pleasing semi-official announcement as to the future status of fourth class postmasters was sent ont from Washington last week. It has not been contradicted, and may be assumed to be authoritive. The statement was to the effect that the rural, or fourth class postmasters, who have no fixed terms of office such as the presidential postmasters have, are to retain their places so long as they perform the duties to the satisfaction of their official superiors.

Much is gained for good government when a postmaster feels that me it will keep him in office and the caprice of a politician cannot put him ont of it. The day will come assuredly when another forward step will be taken. The wishes of a representative should not be supreme when a vacancy is to be filled. The rural community which the postmaster is to serve should have an opportunity to express its preferences. No man to whom it has reasonable objections should be forced upon it. If the wishes of community and of a representative clash his should be disregarded. The fourth class postmasters should be taken entirely out of the hands of the spoilsmen.

PAID BY TWO COUNTIES

There is one woman in Delaware who is on the regular pay roll of two counties and who draws quarterly salaries of equal proportions to the amount of $300 per year from both New Castle and Kent Counties. With the beginning of this quarter, her check went forward from Dover and at the same time from Wilmington, for $37.50.

Mrs. Anna Gibbons is the woman who enjoys this unique distinction, and she is one county employe of the many on the rolls and books in Delaware, who does not have to worry about the condition of the county treasury or the existence of county orders, for she is reasonably sure to receive one of her checks right on the dot no matter what happens, as she has just twice the chances of her associate county employes.

Mrs. Gibbons is, however, not a pensioner. She performs hard manual labor as well as holds a position of singular responsibility.

She is the bridgetender at Fleming's Bridge, over the stream which is the boundary line between New Castle and Kent Counties, and her duties demand that she swing to and fro, with the use of the crude machinery there, the drawbridge over the boundary stream. She was appointed by the Levy Courts of both counties as her husband's successor when he died this summer. Previously, however, she had been discharging all the duties of the bridgetender during her husband's illness, as well as raising a family and superintending her little home and cares and taking care of some stock.

Now it is reported that the bridge is fast getting into a state of unsoundness and is already unwieldy and dangerous, and the Levy Courts of both counties many have to go there and reach an agreement on repairing the structure or building a new bridge.

PENINSULA PARAGRAPHS

Although workmen are engaged daily in excavating for foundations for the new Wilmington, P. B. & W. railroad station and the work is being pushed as rapidly as possible on the elevated tracks throughout that city, it will be fully two years before over head trains are run through Wilmington. The new station which will be one of the finest east of Pittsburg, will cost $500,000. It will be built partially on piling driven to a depth sufficient to assure a solid foundation and upon a base which will be set upon steel girders resting upon cement piers.

One of the most remarkable cats in this county is owned by Mr. Benjamin M. Hazell, of Millington. This cat goes out in the fields with Mr. Hazell and when a bird is shot it will bring it to its master and seems to enjoy hunting as much as any well-trained dog. The other qualities of this cat are just as remarkable.

The ducking season opened on the world renowned ducking grounds, known as the Susquehanna Flats at the mouth of the Susquehanna river, off the shores of Cecil and Howard counties last week. The weather conditions were the most unfavorable on opening day in recent years. Besides ducks there has been an unusually large number of wild geese on the Flats during the past few days.

This little story comes from the south: The first slice of goose had been cut and the minister of the Zion church looked at it with as keen anticipation as was displayed in the faces around him. "Dat's as fine a goose as I ever saw, Brudder Williams," he said to his host. "Where did you get such a fine one?" "Well, now, Mistah Rawley," said the carver of the goose, with a sudden access of dignity, "when you preach a special good sermon I never axes you where you got it. Seems to me dat's a triv'al matter, anyway."

In ye olden times it was customary for farmers' wives to receive the proceeds derived from the sale of butter and eggs. Of course they were expected to pay the grocery bills and meet a few other contingent household expenses, but the bulk of the money could be spent by the house-wife according to her own sweet will. But the modern creamery has changed things somewhat, and now her income is confined principally to the sale of eggs. The butter money is claimed by the head of the house.

A large whale, estimated to be 100 feet long, was seen sporting about a half mile off Rehoboth Beach several days last week. He disappeared last Friday night.

Ex-Governor Robert J. Reynolds and Mrs. Hester Cubbage were married Thursday evening at the residence of her brother, Eugene Thomas, near Marydel, Rev. Edward H. Collins, resident pastor Marydel charge.—Dover Index.

THE PROFESSOR'S DAUGHTER

BY JAY PALMER

Eliot Potter was making an experiment this summer. He was sick of tutoring—he hated it, but had tried it during former vacations, because he determined by book or by crook to work his way through college and then study medicine; it was his one ambition, and it had been sufficiently strong thus far to overcome every obstacle.

[illegible] tired out from hard study and the examinations of his junior year, he welcomed an opportunity to recuperate among the White Mountains and at the same time to earn a little by accepting a place as bellman at one of the large hotels.

At any rate it will be easier than coaching stupid youngsters, he thought, as he alighted at the great empty Star View House the day before the season opened.

The location was delightful; it commanded a magnificent view of the whole Franconia range of mountains and the beautiful valley looking north to Mount Washington in the blue distance. Potter drank in the bracing air with pleasure and applied himself to his new duties with a cheerful alacrity. It promised to be a warm summer, and the guests, arriving at first singly or in small groups, by July began to appear in shoals and spread themselves over the broad acres and through the long corridors and wide piazzas, until every spot was alive with color and human interest.

Potter was just in the relaxed mood to enjoy the study of his fellow-beings which this chance situation afforded him. The sudden eruption of whole classes of undergraduates a few years before as hotel-waiters in that region had made the presence of college men in any such capacity a matter now of no surprise or comment; and the guests at a New England summer resort are always of the well-bred class that can respect the self-respecting, so altogether his vacation promised to be fairly profitable and agreeable.

At first, when the mountain wagons, with their sturdy four-in-hands and horns gayly tooting, rolled away bearing a merry party to the Profile or Flume, he felt it momentarily irksome to be "out of it all," but he soon learned to regard such departures with equanimity. The people he really envied were the occasional pedestrians who tramped from pure love of it, for he was a hardy athlete and loved adventure. When one of these, always a transient guest, stopped there bringing a story of a climb over a mountain or through a notch, it would set the blood tingling in his veins.

I must do something, he said to himself, soon after his arrival, to keep going, or I shall stagnate surely.

But what to choose? There was golf, to be sure—he had been scratch on the college team, but of course to play here was out of the question. He might caddy—the very thing! He would get exercise and fun out of it, too. The proprietor, knowing that an intelligent caddy would be always in demand, was willing—even glad to allow him a few hours daily for such a purpose; so he found himself speedily launched on a new career.

The links were not ideal; they had been laid out but a short time, and the grass was stubby and the holes were too close—so close, in fact, that a good player found little use for brassy, because a long drive and good approach were pretty sure to place him on the greens. The worst of it was that the many players interfered with one another, and the dabblers were most exasperating—it required an exercise of almost superhuman courtesy on the part of the serious ones to tolerate them. However, they made the best of it, for golf was too much "the thing" to be given up lightly.

Among the guests at the Star View was a handsome, quiet young fellow, Van Dyke by name whom Potter rather liked. The fancy appeared to be mutual, for after employing him a few times as caddy Van Dyke engaged him regularly. The young man was seemingly regaining his health after a siege of chills, which continued to attack him occasionally even here. It was the year after the war with Spain, and from his bearing Potter thought it likely he had been in the army, although Van Dyke himself dropped no hint. However, when his proud mother arrived upon the scene, the secret was out—he was presented everywhere as "my son, who took San Juan with the Rough Riders," and the story of his prowess and mighty deeds flew through the hotel and along the wide verandas, acquiring color as it traveled, until the modest young hero was made thoroughly miserable. Potter was much amused at his trials and at his indifference to the feminine charmers so willing to be charmed, until—but we anticipate.

One day two ladies had arrived and Potter, after directing the men with trunks to the rooms engaged, was hurrying through the hall to the office when he came face to face with the younger of the two arrivals—a slender, stylish girl of clear blonde type.

Mr. Potter—oh, how delighted to see a friend here! Bewitching was her smile and frankly friendly the little hand stretched out to greet him.

But in his confusion and embarrassment Potter did not seem to see it; he colored like a school boy and then went pale. Here I am only the bellman, Miss Wentworth, he stammered.

Oh! the tone was icy as her hand dropped. I shall take care to remember. She swept past him with the air of a princess.

Idiot! muttered Potter, as the door closed behind her. Why did I say that? How shall I bear it to see Professor Wentworth's daughter here?

He knew now that his dream had been vain; of course, it was madness to think to win one so far beyond him; for she was very rich, being sole heir to her mother's large fortune. The unexpected meeting had made him savage; and she—she would never forgive him.

Indeed it seemed so; for days afterward she did not appear to see him, nor would she allow her aunt, who had met him, to converse with him. Then she suddenly changed her attitude and began to direct him, without pre face, to do this or that as coldly and impassively as an icicle.

This was bad enough, but worse was to come. Van Dyke, the indifferent, fell under her spell—they all did for that matter. But—Van Dyke must teach her to play golf—the artful coquette! As if he, Potter, had not on the college links superintended her first drive, tee-ed her balls, carried her clubs, and taught her so carefully that she could almost outplay her teacher.

It was gall and wormwood to Potter, but he continued to caddy for Van Dyke—he was too proud to refuse, nor did he wish to; like the proverbial moth, he learned no wisdom from his singed wings. Of course, Miss Wentworth began an outrageous flirtation with the ex-soldier, to the silent wrath of the unfortunate Potter. To him the crowd of other players was but small consolation, for many other chances of meeting favored them daily; he ground his teeth at the thought of how many and proceeded to hate Van Dyke as cordially as he had before liked him.

Sometimes Miss Wentworth forgot her role as novice and played so well that Van Dyke's delighted compliments would remind her of the slip; at such times Potter fancied he caught a gleam of fun in her eyes as she turned them casually in his direction, but it was quenched so quickly that he could never be sure.

One day they were all standing together waiting for some other players to pass them when she shivered in the wind. I am cold, she said, looking pointedly at Potter; I left my red jacket on the piazza near the door.

Potter made no sign and Van Dyke, more considerate of his feelings, sent little Jim, Miss Wentworth's small caddy, to fetch it, whereat she frowned. Shafts of this sort were being constantly launched at Potter, but by this time he had himself well in hand and managed to parry them without flinching.

Meanwhile, affairs were approaching a crisis between Van Dyke and his fair pupil. Even her little freckled, snub-nosed caddy could see that. One September afternoon as they waited by a bunker he sidled up to Potter.

Hully gee, but ain't that a daisy mash? he volunteered, with an impish grin and a sage wag of his curly crop—a piece of impudence which put the climax to Potter's desperation.

Van Dyke may whistle for a caddy to-morrow, he growled under his breath. Blest if I can stand it any longer!

Accordingly the next afternoon he got leave to absent himself and started on a long tramp. He chose a path through the woods, which near the hotel led past the site of an old iron mine years since abandoned. It was an eerie place; he stopped as he always did to gaze down at the dark mouth of the old shaft, which opened from the side of a funnel-shaped excavation, now thickly overgrown with moss and ferns and asters. Farther along, away from the path, the walls of the tunnel had caved in in places, making dark chasms, at the bottom of which lay patches of white, for there the winter snows lasted far into the summer.

The neglected spot fitted into Potter's thoughts, and he lingered awhile before setting forth on his walk. When fairly on his way, however, the beauty of the scenery, the invigorating mountain air, the delight of exercise, all beguiled him into a lighter mood until he found himself repeating those comforting lines of the old poet:

"Be she fairer than the day,
Or the flowery meads in May—
If she be not so to me,
What care I how fair she be?"

Turning back at dusk at the end of his journey, he had again to pass by the old mine. As he neared it he thought he heard a cry; from the hollow by the shaft opening it came faintly: Help! Help!

Peering down in the twilight he saw a white, upturned face among the ferns: Miss Wentworth—Alice!

Eliot, is it you? I am so glad!

He leaped down to her side, when to his astonishment two arms met tightly around his neck, and then—she fainted. Even in that predicament Potter felt a strange exultation. How he was to get her out unless she could help herself a little he did not know; but for the moment that did not concern him. It was enough that she had wanted him—called him by his name, and that they two were there together.

But Miss Wentworth came to herself with disconcerting promptness. I fell when reaching for some ferns; I must have turned my ankle or I could have climbed out alone," she explained. The pain has made me faint, but I think I can get up now with your help—

I could go to the hotel for assistance, he suggested doubtfully, and a carriage?

No, no; it would make a scene and frighten auntie; I had rather you would not.

So Potter half-carried, half-dragged her to the edge of the embankment, and lifted her into the path. Then, after a slow and silent journey broken by many pauses, during which each seemed to hear the other's heart beat, he brought her safely to the hotel and left her in her aunt's care.

On his return he found that Van Dyke had departed suddenly that afternoon. This fact, taken in connection with Miss Wentworth's change of manner, encouraged him to think that perhaps Van Dyke had put his fate to the touch and—lost it all. He sought his room that night with his mind in a strange tumult between doubt and hope.

Anyway, he resolved, bellman or not, I shall let nothing keep me from learning the truth from her own lips when I see her.

The next day he received this note:

Dear Mr. Potter: My sprain is not bad, but the doctor will not let me walk for awhile yet. Will you come to our parlor and let us thank you?

ALICE WENTWORTH.

There he found a most gracious reception awaiting him from the aunt, and a shy one from the invalid. She looked very charming among her gay cushions, and seemed to be suffering from nothing more serious than an inconvenient color, which came and went unaccountably.

At length, when her aunt was called away, she burst out impetuously: Can you forgive me, Mr. Potter, for my horrid behavior ever since I came?—yes, I planned it all deliberately to punish you for your silly pride—but it was silly, now wasn't it? she pleaded.

Potter was on his knees at her side. Alice, can you love me? Will you wait and let me work for you? I will—indeed I will be worthy of you.

There was a moment of silence; then, from among the cushions where she had hidden her face came the answer in muffled tones: Perhaps—I might—Mr. Bellman.

Happiness has been prepared to a sweet dumpling of a country lass who never had a silk gown or a diamond ring or other costly jewel.
